

Tips for Use

You can use these puzzles in so many different ways. You can have students match the word to its prefix/suffix to simply build the words, giving as many puzzles at a time as you think they can handle or whichever ones you want them to work on. For accountability, you can have them write the words they made on a piece of paper. To increase difficulty, have them use that word in a sentence, etc.

You could also use these as a whole group teaching tool. Each time you introduce a new prefix or suffix, build words with that prefix or suffix together by figuring out which words you put with what to make real words that represent each picture.

Example: For the plural ("s" and "es") suffix puzzles, I recommend giving those 2 and have them sort the pictures by which suffix would make the word plural and correct.

Example: For the "ed" puzzles where each represents a different sound -ed makes, give them those 3 puzzles only and have them sort each picture by what sound "ed" makes when it is added to the end of the word (ed, d, or t).

I hope your students love these!
